SOMETHING ABOUT THACKERAY .- A friend of onrs, who sometimee writes or used to write for his own amnsement, informens that in looking through a bundle of old papers the other day he came across the following memoranda concerning the novelist Thackeray, made years ago and ntterly forgotten. As ho has placed them at our disposal, we publish them just as we find them jotted down in his mannscript. The extracts in the concluding part are passages that strnck the writer in eading Heary Esmond when that novel first

Council Proceedings .- The Boards of the old Council met in final session last night. The bonds of the newly-elected policemen were approved; also, the bond of George Stealey, City Engineer. The proposition to loan $100,000 to the Fort Wayne Railroad | Fair, is the centre figure of the plot, was exwas rejected. Several petitions were referred | quisitely played by Pauline Castri, who has a to the Finance Committee. The bonds of the | petit figure and sweet voice, not very pow-City Railroad were approved by the upper | erful, bnt sympathetic; she is, perhaps, too Board. A resolution was adopted tendering profuse in ornament for the most correct taste, Boards adjeurned sine die.

A rnmor was current on the street Cumberland river with his force, and made an attack on Fort Donclson. We do not give full credence to the rumor, but must admit that Fort Donelson is an inviting point for attack at this particular time. The garrison is small, and the resistance against overpowering numbers would necessarially be feeble. The capture of the fort might cost the rebels a precions delay of time, and a loss of treasure in blood; and, there being no city to plunder, banks to rob, or valuable shipping to destrey, it might well be argued that Forrest would not be guilty of such madness as to engage in an undertaking likely to yield such barreu results. But we must recollect that Fort Dennelson was one of the first boasted strongbolds of the South surrendered to the Federal army, and, in surrendering it, the State of Tennessee was lost to the confederacy. To recapture the fort from the Union forces would satiate the longings of pride, and no risk would searcely be too great to accomplish the undertaking. The disastrous defeat of Forrest in his assault on the battlements last year only would urge him on to a new attempt, and, though the loss might be heavy, who also appears for the first time. Signor onld feel satisfied in staining the ground rith blood of his own men, even if the robel banners waved for but an hour over the strong walls of the fort. We do not wish to he nnderstood as desirous of impressing upon the mind of the public that we place any confidence in the rumor of an attack on Fort Donelson-we argue only that such a programme might be possible. A gentleman who left Clarksville, Tennessee, yesterday morning, states that a force of rebel cavalry was reported on the Cumberland river, opposito Canton, and it was presumed to be an advance of Forrest's command. Canton is next week, and on Saturday the box-sheet about fifteen miles from Fort Donelson.

Couars-Martial .- No business was transacted in either of the courts-martial yesterday, as each body was left without a quorum. Col. Vaaghan having been relieved as President of the upper court, but five members remained to transact business. General Grant has ordered that all officers and soldiers on detached duty belonging to the Ninth Army Corps, shall at once be relieved from said duty, and ordered to report in Maryland without delay. Lientenant-Colonel Goodell, oI the 36th Massschusetts infantry, came under the requirements of this order, and was relieved as a member of the courteartial, leaving the body without a quorum. Both courts stand adjourned from day te day, until new members shall be detailed to inof whose enough to re-establish a people's aberties faded above his grave.

It was Count de Cavonr who, in 1857, being visited by three Italian engineers, MM. Grandis, Grantoni, and Sommellier, having in their heads an invention for tunnelling the Alps, saw hopes in the project even beyond the mist of contempt thrown upon it by half the scientific societies in Europe, and, taking his visitors by the hund, bade them be of good cheer. Through the personal influence of Cavorr and his colleagues, M. Paleccapa and General De Menabrea, the startling scheme of a tunnel without shafts, with machinery impelled and ventilation seenred by compre-sed air and water, was satisfactorily tested by government commission, introduced in com-pany with a railroad bill into the Piedmontes Chamber of Deputies, and agreed to by that body in an overwhelming vote.

The preliminary work was began at once under the direction of the eagineers who conseived it. The reports of those gentlemen, and of the committee appointed by the Italian Senate, exhibit some of the most remarkable factor is the bitter of the interior of the property o facts in the history of ongineering enterprise.

The ronte of the tunnel, fixed by a difficu trigonometrical survey from the summit of Grand Vallon (the highest peak in that part of the Alps) was through Mont Cenis, from the valley of Rochemolles to the valley of Fourneaux, n distance of eight miles. Both vulleys were thinly populated, and to both it was necessary to convey the needed immenso masses of machiacry, supplies, and building materials from depots far distant and from plains far below. Railwaye, canals, undreseroirs sufficient to bave built up the fortunes of two cities were constructed; all the machinery, originally made in Belgium, was brought and set up with inconceivable difficulty; the valleys grew white, as if in a single night, with moke from the chimneys of temporary villages in cither valley; experiments and improvements went on unceasingly, and at last, after much delay during the war of 1851, and much trial and disappointment and success, the sides of the mountain resounded with the blows of n mechanism which bas since vin li-cated its right to consideration among the cheatest and most formidable forces of the age. The compressed air which keeps the machinery at work is conveyed by pipes through the great length which the tunael at both ends has now attained. Ten perforators strike the reck, piercing it very much as a gim-let tores a plank. When eighty holes have been drilled to a depth of from twenty-seven to thirty-two inches, a blast is prepared, which generally shatters about a yard of the rock. A burst of compressed air clears away the gasses immediately after the explosion. At first only one blast could be obtained in twenextreme ends of the tunnel are generally fresh The systems by which the supply of com-pressed air is furnished are different at Four-neaux and Roebemolles, and have overturned many preconceived and accepted ideas in hydrostatics and pneumatics. At Bard mucche, in the valley of Rochemolles, an immensa reserveir of water is creeted eighty-five fact above the machine-house, which feeds ten company pressing columns in the shape of siphons, each of which communientss with a chamber filled with atmospheric air, compressing it to n tersion of six atmospheres, when it escapes into a recipient communicating with the pipes to which it is introduced as occasion requires But at Fourneaux another invention is used called the pump compressor, which supplies three times the amount of compressed air, while the machinery easts one third less than the colunn-compressor.

As the tunnel becomes deeper it is antici ty-four bours, but a more complete organiza-tion of the workmen has made the labor more rapid, and by boring deeper holes and employ ing two gangs of laborers, it is hoped that from two to three operations may be accom-plished during a day. The supply of com-pressed air is found to be abundan, and the pated that the difficulty of supplying fresh air by the present method will be increased, and or sucking out the maphitic asmorphere, and giving freer scope for the pure air introduced through the pipes, bus been arranged. A score of nevel minor inventions for different purposes coanceted with the work are chumer Since the tunnel was began the State of Savoy, embracing one end of the tunnel, has into the postession of France, which onsand francs per me'rc, and for every year ess than twenty-five an additional sum of five raised to six hundred thousand france per nunum if the works be terminated within fifteen years. The total cost of the work is estimated at sixty-five mil ion of francs. According to minister of public works, the tunnel will be completed in about twelve and a half years and seven'y one metres, or rather more than complished from the entrance on he side of Bardonneche, and on the side of Fourneaux cted to be completed hereafter anoually. a branch, twenty five miles in length, with the nrication betw. on Chambery nai Turia. prope, is to be joined to it by the tunael rough them, and will thus take her appro-eree between Europe and Inlia, shortening and easing the transit of passengers and narvell us result, scie, co will perceive, in the ished, the addition of a new force, alm of a onderful as steam, to the forces with which ature.—N. Y. World BEAUTY OF TURKISH WOMEN. -- As to
